CAMBRIDGE REGIONAL COLLEGE STUDENTS
PERFORM REMEMBRANCE DANCE AT DUXFORD

Tuesday 18th November 2008

Performing Arts students from Cambridge Regional College (CRC) have participated in an annual excursion to Duxford Imperial War Museum.

Students studying in their first year of a Performing Arts course at CRC have travelled to the famous War Museum recently where they spent the day working and creating a piece of contemporary dance / movement called "From Order to Chaos" as part of a Remembrance Day Dance Project.

Prior to the workshop day at Duxford, the students developed ideas for work using research of key themes and images of war. These findings were then developed further during the educational and practical workshop at Duxford. The students performed to the general public, Museum Directors, friends and family.

Sarah Borley, a Performing Arts lecturer said, "This was our 5th visit in a row to Duxford to participate in the educational workshop project and I am so pleased that this year's group was just as successful as the previous years".

Students from the College Media Department also filmed the performance live to help with practice for their course. Furthermore, the College arranged collaboration with the BBC where 18 of their students will be working as runners and researchers prior to the event.
