CAMBRIDGE LECTURER IS HISTON HUNK

Thursday 27th November 2008

A Lecturer from Cambridge Regional College (CRC) who plays for Histon Football Club is playing the biggest game of his career this weekend.

Sports & Public Services Lecturer, Neil Andrews (29) will lead his team into the national spotlight when they take on Football giants Leeds United, on Sunday. He is Captain of Histon Football Club, playing in the second round of the FA Cup, after beating Swindon earlier this month 1-0.

Neil has played for the club for over 11 years and currently plays in the Centre Midfield position. He has scored over 20 goals since 2004, despite a few years of injury problems. As well as being a firm fan favourite for his skills on the field, he was also recently voted "Histon Hunk" in a competition in the run-up to this weekend's big game.

Before coming to CRC he worked for the Football Association as a Football Development Officer, where he ran Level 1 Coaching courses. From there he realised he wanted to move into teaching on a more full-time basis and decided to apply to Cambridge Regional College as a Sports and Public Services Lecturer.

On this weekend's game and working at CRC Neil said, "I train 3 to 4 times per week for the team and CRC are very understanding and flexible in letting me organise my teaching timetable so I can attend these training sessions. I hope to see a lot of my students both at the big game this weekend and at my testimonial next May!"

The game will be shown live on ITV1 on Sunday 30th November with kick-off, from Histon's home Stadium, the Glass World Stadium, at 12.15pm.
